Plug-ins As Photoshop gets more complex and powerful, so do the programs available for it, and for that matter, so do the programs for other image editing applications like Elements. "Plug-ins" are the programs that other companies or individuals develop. They plug directly into the programs you are working with and enable you to do more with Photoshop and Photoshop Elements. Plug-ins are so important that Adobe and other vendors build them into their programs instead of allowing third-party developers to create them. Some of the most popular Photoshop plug-ins are shown in Figure 10-2. To insert a Photoshop plug-in, go to the Photoshop menu and choose Plugins⇒Create a new profile⇒Choose User Defined⇒Browse Plug-ins. Then browse for the plug-in you want to use

Q: Dynamically add to config dictionary at runtime I have read that you can dynamically add items to a config dictionary using this method: public void AddToConfig(string configName, Func configValueFactory) { if (!this._configs[configName] is Dictionary) this._configs[configName] = new Dictionary(); this._configs[configName]["config"] = configValueFactory(); } But I have a problem. My data-context will have more than 1 config-settings, and depending on the setting it will add a new entry to the config (see image attached). But I'm not sure how to add the items in the config-section for the config-settings I add at run-time. My code will look like this: //get the dictionary with the configuration settings in the data-context var ConfigSection = this._config["config-settings"]; this.AddToConfig("config-section", () => { //add the settings here }) this.AddToConfig("config-setting", () => { //add the settings here }) I have tried to handle the AddToConfig methods with a try catch but I only get 'Service is disposed' errors. A: The problem you are facing is that, while you can use the ConfigManager to query a Dictionary and initialize it with the results of some Func, you cannot modify its data in that way. The ConfigManager is not a CQS component. It will never throw an exception when you attempt to add a new element to the dictionary. But also, it does not implement any pattern for unit testing. When you step into the ConfigManager in a debugger you will find no loop that could have been used to add new elements to the dictionary. The ConfigManager is just a dictionary. It will never throw any exceptions while you modify its values. But it also does not expose any pattern for unit testing. The ConfigManager is just a dictionary. Yes, you could try and test the ConfigManager, but you should probably look to it's documentation to
